Dennis, Crystal edited the memo a bit so I am sending it to you once more.

I apologize for the multiple copies here but I want to be very sure you are comfortable since it is your letterhead.

Ok - this is it.

I did the best I could to take the intent of Renee's changes and incorporate them where appropriate. Some of Renee's edits went to an introductory paragraph indicating that the Four-State Study included Texas - that's not correct. New York was the fourth state - not Texas.

That said, I think the big issue is the "why" on the Texas architecture - which I'm not sure any of us have good answer to - so I added a little bit to on sentence stating "This is the same basic architecture recommended for Nevada, because it is simple, transparent, and easy to understand." Not stellar, but it's something. If anyone has a better idea - by all means toss it out there.

No problem, I will just figure out what you would say and put it on your letterhead. :)

I may even generate a bill from you and send it to me.

Is there any chance Crystal has a tracked changes version of this so I can see the final tweaks. My quick read says it's OK but would like to see the differences without having to work too hard at it.

On a related note--did Vic run your data using the TX weights? If so, did it move dollars around hugely?

If you don't have a tracked changes version go ahead with it as it is.

Cheers.
